Speaking up to raise a concern of any type is important to help us maintain a strong ethical culture at RACO. Having the courage to speak up when something doesn't seem right shows integrity and helps us to protect each other. We all share the responsibility of creating a respectful workplace and protecting our brand.

Speaking up when something doesn't seem right demonstrates our integrity and that we have the courage to do the right thing. Speaking up helps to prevent mistakes and misconduct and foster innovation. Speaking up shows that we care about each other and our business. If you report a concern, it will be handled with appropriate confidentiality and discussed with others only as needed or advisable under the circumstances. RACO is committed to protecting our people against retaliation. Retaliation is serious misconduct that will not be tolerated, and any RACO professional (including partners/principals or staff) who takes retaliatory action will be held accountable.
